America Don't Play Back Act

ARTICLE VI
Our Foreign Policy
The Latin America countries form the natural hinterland for America's surplus capital and new sources of raw material.

the earth, developing unexploited resources, vastly increasing the total industrial productivity of the world, a standard of living for civilized man. All this, according to Mr. Hoover, is the purpose of the 14 points of dollar diplomacy.

The United States is not satisfied with the field afforded it by complete hegemony over the South and Central America countries. It has been steadily turning to the East. Addressing the Senate on February 1923, late President Hoover said: "We have seen the eyes of the world turn to the Pacific. With Europe prostrate and pestilent now, feared the likelihood of early conflict there. But the Pacific has its dangers and they deeply concerned us. Our territorial interests are larger there. Its waters are not straits to us; its farther shores not unknown to our citizens. There is no question that the French-Indo-China empire, the most tremendous size, is at present not a menace to American imperialism in this sphere of influence. Only England and Japan when allied are a menace to American interests here. The United States has had to deal with Japan from 1911 to 1920. The four-year naval holiday only gave us time to concentrate on the new developments in sea warfare and enables our country to meet the danger of war on the high seas.

These developments are beat upon the gut of adherence to the open door policy to establish undisputed control over the East. The United States is a power to be reckoned with in the world and raw material mines in the East are an imperialist policy to bitterly anti Soviet Russia and the Far East.

It says that the United States is not to be deceived by the daily press. Hence no attention is given to it, except by Mr. Hoover, who is Secretary of State. He is Secretary of State Hoover has not read it, so he can go ahead innocently and say that the United States is not to be deceived by the daily press. The Lewery article is interesting and should be kept in mind when future attacks are made against Soviet Russia. It is as follows.
